

Make-up Assignment Information

As is mentioned in the course policies, “If you are unable to attend class your participation grade may be made up by working on one of the problems covered on the day you missed and presenting the problem in its entirety in Flipgrid.” This document is to provide details as to how this is to be done. The process is explained through a series of steps

1. Email me to provide your reason for missing class and receive authorization to make-up the participation points. I will then email you back with a copy of the worksheet the class worked on for the day missed.
2. Work on the worksheet and pick one of the problems (the things label 1,2,3,... not some part of a problem) to present.
3. If you are allowed to make up the points, you then need to go to Flipgrid and make a video of your presenting the problem and your solution. You may need to create a Flipgrid account if you haven't already and you will need to use your @email.arizona.edu email address. Having done that you should be able to find the assignment I have created. The explanation should be enough for one of your peers in the class to be able to follow how you got the answer.

The videos completed more than a week after the class session that was missed may not be given credit. Try to complete the make-up assignment as soon as possible after the class that was missed so as to mitigate the impact of the absence.
